

connecting majors and careers quiz

Mark each item as True or False

	True	False
It's best to declare a major upon entrance to college and stick with that major.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
Most careers require specific undergraduate majors.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
The average employee of the future will have three different careers and 12 different jobs within those careers.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
Choosing a major is an ongoing process that takes into consideration your interests, skills, and potential career goals.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
The freshman year is too early to begin preparing for a career.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
Employers are most concerned with your grade point average and the name of your major.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
To make an appropriate decision about your choice of major or career, you need to have a good understanding of yourself first.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
Your values play only a minor role in choosing a potential career.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
Employers don't value leadership skills and interpersonal skills as highly as they do a good GPA.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
"Real-world" experience helps you develop skills and clarify potential career interests.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>

If you scored 7 or better, you have a pretty good idea of what's required to make good decisions about your future.

Click here to return to the Connecting Majors & Careers page.